Sources said today that Italy has yielded to French insistence and agreed to collect an import fee that will make up for the devaluation of the dollar and bring the price of imported U.S. farm products up to European levels.

6th U.S. Jet Is Reported Shot Down

SAIGON, Dec. 28 (UPD.-A force of about 200 U.S. fighterbombers struck North Vietnam today for the third consecutive day of air assaults, which North Vietnam called an "extremely grave and criminal act of war." The planes were said to be ready for a fourth day of attacks

The raids, ordered by President Nixon, were the heaviest since those of May 1-4, 1970, when U.S. filers flew 400 sorties in four separate strikes. The 1970 mids were the heaviest since the bomb halt in 1968. It was the first time since the 1963 halt that the "reinforced protective reaction" strikes had been carried on three days.

Military sources said the strices involved about 200 of the 350 first-line fighter-bombers Southeast Asia. To use all $60, Defense Department sources said, would mean achievement of "the world's best maintenance record. Air Defense Targets

The sources said the immediate goal was to destroy North Viet-nam's air defense-MiG jets, SAM missiles and anti-aircraft artillery—which have been knock-ing down U.S. planes bombing the Ho Chi Minh Trail. They said the ultimate goal is to enable U.S. aircraft to continue their hombing of the trail in an effort to prevent North Vietnam from stockpiling enough supplies in South Vietnam to enable guerrillas there to mount heavy offensive during the U.S. troop withdrawal. Radio Hanoi reported another U.S. plane shot down and warned that the strikes would delay release of American prisoners of war held since the heavy, regular bombing raids of the mid-1960s against the Hanol and Haiphong

Sixth Reported Downing

The broadcast issued only sketchy account of the sixth reported downing in the three-day bombings. It said the jet was shot down yesterday by "the people and army" in Quang Binh Province, just north of the Demilitarized Zone, but did not say whether the crew was killed or captured. It has reported the capture of several crew members.

Another Hanni breadcast specifically mentioned an American Kenneth Richard Johnson, shot down Dec. 18, before the major raids on the North, and said the bombings would delay his release along with the hundreds of other American airmen in North Vietnamese hands, "The more reckless Nixon becomes... the weaker becomes the position of Kenneth Richard Johnson," the broadcast said. The North Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, in a statement broadcast by Hanol radio, said the American planes had hit the Don Hoi Hospital and Le Ninh farm collective and caused heavy losses in human lives and civilian property through the use of cluster bombs, fragmentation bombs and rockets.

The official statement called the raids an "extremely grave and criminal act of war." Military sources said the jets which took part in today's mis-(Continued on Page 2, Col 5)

Bank Robbers Still at Large After All-Day Forest Search

SAARBRUECKEN, West Germany, Dec. 28 (UPI).—The police broke off at dusk today a fruitless, day-long search in wooded country near here for the three men who robbed a Cologne bank yesterday morning of 311,424

A task force of 550 men, aided by dogs and helicopters, centered the search on a 12-square-mile section of woodland at the outskirts of this city on the French border. By late this afternoon, a temporary police headquarters in a church reported no sign of the fugitives, and the search, already hampered by fog and low clouds, was halted at 4:30 p.m.

It was in the forest last night that the bandits freed two hostages-both high police officialsand abandoned the panel truck they used to lead authorities on a 125-mile chase from Cologne and along the Rhine River.

The police said they thought the three would try to slip across the French border, and patrols were increased and guards at crossing points strengthened on both sides of the border.

The police issued a radio appeal to all residents in the area to avoid taking risks if they should come in contact with the robbers, believed to be two Prenchmen and an Austrian armed with submachine guns. In Cologne, Werner Hamacher, 47, chief of the criminal investigation section of the city police and one of the hostages, said at a morning press conference that the robbers thought they would find more money in the bank. "They thought that after the Christmas holiday the bank would have more cash on hand," he said.

Chief Hamacher, flanked by the chief of uniformed police, Hans Krauss, the other hostage, also said one robber told him he could live "for 10 or 12 years" on his share of the booty.

"The others spoke of building a new life," he said. "I told them they didn't stand a chance. The Cologne police are holding

Hanoi Assails Laird Stand on Raid

HONG KONG, Dec. 28 (AF)... North Vietnam's official radio accused U.S. Defense Minister Meivin Laird today of using false and shameless excuses when he told a Washington news conference that the United States had resumed intensive bombing of North Vietnam to protect American troops in South Viet-

In a Vietnamese language broadcast attacking Mr. Laird, Radio Hanoi said Mr. Laird's statement was "just another attempt" by the Nixon administration to "justify extension and intensification of the Vietnam war" under the guise of protecting American troops. "The best and only way to save the lives of American troops. Radio Hanoi continued, is for the U.S. imperialists to immediately and totally withdraw all U.S. troops and immediately end this foul war of U.S. aggression." North Vietnam's official army newspaper warned, meanwhile, that "Nixon will never get back captured American servicemen unless he takes steps to end the United States war of aggression against Vietnam."

Quan Doi Nhan Dan also accused the United States of lying when it said the latest plane attacks were directed against only military installations and munitions and supply facilities.

On Sunday and yesterday it declared, "wave after wave of U.S. warplanes hit civilian-only populated villages and towns

Asked specifically "What would most people do if ordered to shoot all inhabitants of a Vietnamese village suspected of aiding the enemy, including old men, women and children?" 87 percent answered: "Follow orders and shoot." In contrast, the answer "refuse to shoot them" was given by only 19 percent of 989 persons who mited to a 40-minute interview dealing with their attitudes toward the Calley case two months after he was convicted of premeditated murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. The former teamster leader, whose 13-year sentence for jury tampering and pension-fund fraud was commuted last week by President Nixon, showed his old bounce as he briskly strode into the probation office here yesterday afternoon. After a meeting of an hour

The conditions imposed on Hoffs by the commutation said that he was not "to engage in direct or indirect management" of any labor organization before March 6, 1980. Mr. Hosner, in an interview, said that there was a major prob-blem in interpreting what constituted "indirect manage-ment." In Washington, Lawrence M. He added that Hoffa could go to union picnics or dinners and that he could express an opinion in a speech on such current is-sues as the Teamster Union's support of Mr. Nixon's economic program without violating the conditions.

He said, however, that it was "a matter of degree" and that the parole board could step in if Hoffs "exercised an influence so that over a time in fact we have a marked change" in union

Book on U.S.-Cuban Break Evokes Comparisons in Chile

By Lewis H. Diuguid

BUENOS AIRES, Dec. 28 (WP). The last American ambassador to Cuba has just written a book on the collapse of U.S. relations with Fidel Castro, and the present ambassador to Chile has asked the State Department to send him a copy.

Philip W. Bonsal argues in "Cuba, Castro and the United States," that Mr. Castro's early provocations triggered unjustifiably harsh U.S. reprisals, beginning with a crucial decision in implemented by President Eisenhower's secretary of the Treasury, Robert Anderson,

The decision was that the two American oil companies operating in Cuba should refuse to refine Soviet crude oil that the Castro government imported, and Mr. Bonsal says that the American government informed him of this critical turn in policy only through an cil company execu-

This reprisal against Mr. Castro's dealing with the Soviet Union was the first overt act in an unannounced policy that climaxed with the Bay of Pigs invasion attempt.

". We in the Havana embassy became aware only gradually and imperfectly, and without real opportunity for comment and discussion, of the new policy of our government," Mr. Bonsal

Although the career diplomat makes no comparisons, there are some eerie similarities between the events of 11 years ago and the uneasy state of present U.S. relations with Chile's Socialist government.

Decisions on Chile

For instance, it is generally assumed in Santiago that U.S. policies unfavorable to President Salvador Allende's government are generated by Treasury Secretary John B. Connally. The decision to deny Export-Import Bank financing for Chilean purchase of Boeing jets is considered by some observers to have driven Chile to the Russians.

More militant Communists and Socialists backing Mr. Allende assume that the other key decisionmaking center outside the Treasury is the CIA, as Mr. Bonsal implies was the case in 1960. Today the ultimate decisions lie with President Nixon. By his own account, Mr. Nixon as vicepresident was the prime advocate of the 1960 decision to arm Cuban exiles for the Bay of Pig- invasion, which was carried out in April, 1961, under President Kennedy.

Mr. Bonsal was named ambassador to Cuba in January, 1959, to replace Earl E. T. Smith, who had been deeply committed to the Batista dictatorship that Mr.

Castro overthrew earlier that month. U.S. Ambassador Nathaniel

Davis was named early in Mr. Allende's term to replace Edward M. Korry, whose analysis of Mr. Allende's electoral victory supported those in Washington who consider Chile to be "lost." Mr. Korry stayed at his post through the first year of negotiations over the fate of nationalized American copper investments.

Mr. Bonsel says his advice in Havana was to negotiate quietly and to reassert U.S. pledges not to intervene in Cuban affairs. As late as January, 1960, President Dwight D. Eisenhower made such a public pledge. The next month, Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan, visiting Havana, signed a deal for Cuban

2 India Scientists Report Isolating Garlic Chemicals Fatal to Insects

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28 (AP)—New evidence was reported yesterday that garlic, the delight of some gourmets, may provide a killer diet for mosquitoes, houseflies and certain other major insect pests of the world.

Two Indian researchers reported that they had isolated. identified and even synthetically duplicated the active chemical ingredients in garlic oil. They said that these are responsible for the crude oil's powers to kill the larvae of certain mosquitoes and agricultural pests.

They said that the chemicals—in either natural or syn. thetic form-killed insects in concentrations as low as five parts per million. The researchers sent a report to the technical journal

The chemicals proved lethal against larvae of various mosquitoes and against those of houseflies, potato tuber moths, red cotton bugs and red paim weevils, they said.

The Trials of Angela Davis

her belief that the future hopes of her black fellow Americans lie in Communism, will go on trial for her life in a month. She has told a reporter for The New York Times that she will not get a fair trial; that "the stage is being set for just a complete railroad." And if Miss Davis is confronted by the dilemma of the black revolutionary in a predominantly white, middle-class society, it is equally true that she herself represents a dilemma for a predominantly open, if not wholly free, nation.

A brilliant student and teacher, Miss Davis was an instructor at the University of Califorms in Los Angeles. When she was dropped from the roster of that state-run institution, presumably for her Communist affiliations, she won widespread support throughout the academic profession in the United States. One aspect of the mutual dilemma was exposed: can a believer in revolution expect, or the government against which the revolution would be directed accord, a forum in and a salary from an agency of that government?

But then a far more serious aspect of the dilemma appeared. Miss Davis was charged with murder, kidnapping and criminal conspiracy, as a result of an affray in the Marin County Courthouse, in which an attempt to free black prisoners caused the death of four persons, including the judge presiding. Miss Davis is accused of supplying the guns for the breakout attempt. She was arrested after a long search and has been held for 15 months, without bail and under maximum

The long delay before trial is not the fault of the state. It was the result of repeated motions by the defendants—including an Angela Davis, who has made no secret of alleged co-conspirator whose case was eventually separated from that of Miss Davis before the bar in San Jose, rather than Marin County. And the refusal of bail, plus the security measures, have been ascribed to the very nature of the offense.

Now Miss Davis asserts that the change of venue will bring her to trial in a community which contains only 2 percent of blacks. Whether this can be the only measure of fairness in a society as mixed as that of the United States is open to question; it might be remarked that the city of San Jose recently elected the first Japanese-American mayor in California, a state which only a little while ago viewed this ethnic group with much more suspicion, and treated it more harshly, than it did the blacks.

In any case, the charge that a black revolutionary cannot receive justice in the United States-a charge which once had the support of a president of Yale University ... has been amply disproved within the past year or so, in a variety of courts in many states: Connecticut, New York and California Itself. The Black Panther label was said to bear a heavier curse in American courts than that of Communist—yet Black Panthers have been freed, by verdict of acquittal and repeatedly hung juries. And behind these courts of first instance lie a succession of appeals courts.

Miss Davis has suffered for her convictions, but if she should suffer for the overt acts of which she stands accused, there is every reason to believe it will only be because they have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The United States is making an objective effort to wrestle with the problem posed by the existence of revolutionaries in an open society. It cannot expect the same objectivity in return.

Korea's Real Emergency

Chung Hee has just obtained from the National Assembly through a series of secret and high-handed maneuvers apparently are designed to deal with an imminent period of painful adjustment in South Korea's economy, politics and international status rather than any threat from the North. Outside observers, including the State Department and the American Embassy in Seoul, have detected signs neither of North Korean preparations for an early invasion of the South, which Mr. Park professes to see, nor of a step-up in infiltration of agents and Communist terrorism.

The external threat Mr. Park evidently fears is not military attack but just the opposite -détente. Relaxation of tension, growing out of President Nixon's Peking visit and current negotiations with North Korea to reunite divided families, could loosen the cement of national unity, weaken Mr. Park's grip on South Korea and swell social unrest, political dissent and economic difficulties. Park would be authorized to combat with most of the special powers he has requested, powers to control wages and prices, to restrict strikes, to han demonstrations and to censor the press.

South Korea's phenomenal 12 percent economic growth rate, faster even than Japan's. has led to inflation and massive trade deficits despite a 40 percent annual rise in exports since 1960 and a doubling of real per capita income. Balance-of-payments problems are being worsened by the winding down of American forces in Vietnam and Korea, major sources of foreign exchange earnings for South Korea, by economic slowdowns in Japan and the United States and by the restrictions on Korean textile exports to the United States imposed on Washington's insistence. South Korea's economy is extraordinarily vulnerable to such factors: 70 percent of its exports are in textiles, wigs and plywood and 75 percent of its total exports go to the United States and Japan. In these circumstances, essential deflationary measures, which are expected to slow

The extraordinary powers President Park growth and lift unemployment, could well add to internal unrest. Student disturbances over compulsory military service and official corruption and demonstrations over housing and social services already have led to the use of troops to restore order. One result has been disaffection within the government majority, with enough pro-government deputies supporting the opposition on one occasion recently to vote no-confidence in Mr. Park's home minister.

Mr. Park's large majority in the assembly. furthermore, no longer is large enough for the two-thirds vote he would need to revise the constitution again to run for still another four-year term in 1975. He may have to prepare to pass power to his nephew, Premier Kim Jong Pil, a more controversial figure, or to stage new parliamentary elections. All this comes at a time when the Nixon administration, under congressional pressure, is being forced to reduce the arms aid shipments which Mr. Park needs over the next five years to modernize his forces as American troops withdraw. Even the continuance of the United Nations Command is in question, now that Communist China, as a UN member, may be able to marshal a majority against it.

The question, therefore, is not whether President Park has reason to be nervous but whether his remedy is right. Stirring fear of a North Korean attack to justify appeals to national unity and for new powers to suppress dissent could easily boomerang. Fear of a Northern attack will not last long in the absence of the reality, Suppression of dissent in a country with 90 percent literacy is likely to be as effective in the long run as breaking the thermometer to cure a fever.

Although he came to power a decade ago in a military coup, President Park later civilianized himself and his fellow generals and took long strides toward representative government. He would be better advised to continue vigorously down this path in the difficult period that lies ahead than to pursue illusory remedies by turning back the with popularity gains with a view to upcoming elections than with compliance with the stern requirements of sound management. Popularity is not a question of publicity, of propaganda; it cannot be begged for; one has to deserve it. If the various governments manage to settle this monetary problem, on which economic and social prosperity depend, the election question will be easy to solve. But success can be obtained only through measures that imply boldness and courage.

Tough Days Ahead for Leone and Italy

By Claire Sterling

ROME.—Tired, troubled and humiliated by the jeers of foreign reporters who have described the 16 days of voting as a guitar-playing, spaghetti-eating comic-opera scene, Italians welcomed the election of their new head of state on the 23d ballot with more relief than the acclaim he deserves. The presi-dent-elect, Giovanni Leone, is a jurist and parliamentarian of exceptional competence and charm, with impeccable democratic credentials. He is going to need

There is no hard proof to bear out leftist charges that Fascist in Sen. Leone's election. The Fascist-Monarchist bloc commanded only 43 of the 1,008 "grand electors" representing the Chamber of Deputies, Senate and regions. If some of these extremeright votes went unsolicited to the victor—who needs 505 votes to win and squeaked through with 518-it seems fairly plain that he could have won without them.

What will doubtless count most from now on, though, is not bow things actually happened but how politicians choose to say they happened. For if Italy seems, in fact, to have been spared a dan-gerous lurch toward the far right or left in this presidential election, it scarcely suits everybody's book to say so.

Usual Ritual

Premier Emilio Colombo's center-left government is to offer its resignation today to the incoming president. This is a prescribed ritual whenever a president is chosen here, every seven in this case though it would have to be invented. Whether or not another center-left government can ever be put together again, this one has been put under intolerable strain.

The alignment which has sent Sen, Leone to the Quirinale is not the one that has governed the country for the last eight His fellow Christian Democrats-give or take perhaps a score of so-called "snipers"voted for him, as did their Social Democratic and Republican allies. Their other allies in the Socialist party voted solidly with the Communists, against. The deciding votes came from the conservative Liberals, excluded from the government since 1963, when the Socialists broke with the Communists to enter it.

Abnormal alignments are customary in presidential elections here. Outgoing President Giuseppe Saragat, an unrelenting democrat, was elected with Communist help. His predecessor, Antonio Segui, had help from the Fascists. The previous president, Giovanni Gronchi had Communist help too. And it is no secret that several of the dominant Christian Democratic party's nine right, left and center factions were trying desperately to make a deal with the Communists until the very eve of this election. The the deal wasn't much of a secret either. Indeed, it is commonly believed that a Christian Democratic-Communist understanding was actually reached, only to melt away under the pressure of events. Ordinarily, in any case, arrangements like that haven't lasted beyond the voting itself. The difference this time was a widespread impression that some party leaders might be playing

This was particularly true of the two candidates who held out for 15 days and 21 ballots: Amintore Fanfani and Francesco de Martino. As Socialist vice-pre-mier, de Martino has done a good deal of late to kill off the centerleft coalition his party belongs to, by demanding that it give way to "more advanced equilibrium" including the Communists. The chances that he really meant ft could hardly be discounted when the Socialist and Communist parties announced a tight alliance for the presidential race some weeks ago, with de Martino as stance several times since the man died in the 1950s. He was an architect of the controversial opening to the left in the early 1960s and of the "Catholic-Com-munist dialogue" in the Italian North soon after. And he led a rump left wing of his party when he ran for the presidency in 1964. After unfavorable returns in the 1968 political elections, however, he suddenly veered rightward—whereupon his fellow Christian Democrat and arch-rival for the presidency, ex-Premier Aldo Moro, moved from center to left. Since then, both men's driving ambition to become president has conditioned practically every fact of Italian political life, and Fanfani's posture has become an enigma. An apparent favorite of the Russians, who think him "in telligent and energetic," he had seemed wholly confident of Communist support despite his now pronounced leanings in the other direction. He lost it suddenly, just a few weeks ago, when dis-sident Communists in the Manifesto Group began to run a daily "Fanfanian anthology" in their paper, quoting generously from his pro-Mussolini, ultra-nationalist and anti-Semitic writings 30 years ago. Manifesto's campaign evidently struck a deep chord of anger and fear here. Before voting even began on Dec. 9, a great many Italians were convinced rightly or wrongly, that Fanfani was Italy's "strong man." capable of carrying the country into reckless totalitarian adventures. Feeling ran so high that the Communist party could not have supported him without splitting

Once Fanfani was forced to withdraw after 15 fruitless ballots, Moro had little chance of replacing him. He was blocked not only by Fanfani's ferocious opposition, but by a growing awareness among moderate leaders that Italy's political condition was too precarious for any strongly marked "bloc" candidate of either the right or left to become chief of state. Their back-to-thewall choice was therefore Sen Leone, former president of the Chamber, a skilled moderator with few enemies and no factional connections.

Leftist Attacks

Though everybody knows the democrat, he has already been accused by leftist leaders of sinister "Fantanian" intentions. And even if their long knives were not out for him, he would be moving into the Quirinale under daunting conditions. When Premier Colombo tenders his formal resignation, the parties governing the country for nearly a decade will be in shambles. The Christian Democrats, who have dominated Italian politics since the war, have evidently been shattered by their shameful impotence in this election. The Corriere della Sera calls them a tragic party.

There is a strong presentiment here that what had started as a tactical alliance between Socialists and Communists may prove more enduring. The same could happen, for the same reason, to an originally temporary alignment of the other three centerleft parties with the conservative Liberals Such a government partnership would have only an 18-vote majority in the Chamber: the British Labor party might survive with such a slender margin, but Rome is not West-

Meanwhile, Italy is in the middle of its worst economic recession since the war. And a referendum on divorce, bristling with dangers of religious war-fare, is looming. An Italian chief of state—even a "strong" one such as Fanfani might have beenwields little power in such matters, beyond that of dissolving parliament. The present parliament has another year and a half to go, and no deputy or senator would welcome the rigors of an electoral campaign any sooner. They may leave the new president no choice, if presently glacial relations amo governing parties and factions within each persist, What good a national election would do under those circumstances, though, is an former colonial ruler and still Malta's source of military sustenance, sees no point in paying heavily to finance this goal simply in order to prepare its own permanent expulsion from Maltese facilities. And Britain's allies -particularly interested in the Mediterranean-share this view.

Mintoff after early hints that he might turn to Moscow if he could not come to terms with the West, originally proposed that Britain and NATO pay £30 million annual rent for continued use of facilities—a staggering increase from the previous fee of slightly over £5 million.

Price Reduced

The British, the North Atlantic allies and the Maltese have been consulting intermittently for months, seeking an acceptable compromise. They haven't succeeded, Mintoff reduced his original asking price to £18 million a year. Britain and NATO came back by upping their original offer to £10 million-half British, half from the alliance.

Since Mintoff spurned this, London suggested he negotiate hilateral aid agreements with other NATO members on an individual basis. The Maltese have had little luck with this idea. The gap between what is being demanded and what is being offered remains apparently

The British maintain Mintoff being unrealistic by not taking into account expenditures-separate from and additional to rent payments but which result from use of the island's facilities by Britain and its allies. .

London estimates such disbursements amount approximately to £13 million a year and provide jobs for 7,000 of Malta's labor force of 100,000. It is notable that unemployed workers in Malta now total roughly 7,000.

In a sense, therefore, London feels it has a strong bargaining position because if a crunch were come Mintoff might be faced with double an already high unemployment rate. But the excitable prime minister also has trump cards in his hands. While he appears to have once held hopes that Libya might take up the financial burden if Britain were expelled, he now seems to mistrust the reliability of support from that wealthy oil-producing gaining access to Malta's facilities. The island republic is not quintessentially important to allied navies-including the U.S. Sixth Fleet-but it is considered strategically vital that it be denied to Moscow's admirals. Were Malta open to Soviet vessels, the U.S.S.R. would be well on its way to penetration of the western Mediterranean as it has already penetrated the eastern Mediter-

Moreover, there is a lurking fear in West Europe that, in the latter case, the United States might thin out or pull back its Sixth Fleet rather than risk see-ing it bottled up. Such a precaution would have strategic logic and would also be consonant with the present American mood for military retrenchment.

The Maltese problem-although no longer as flamboyant as when Mintoff first took power-represents a matter of urgent seriousness. The Russians have not recently been expanding in the Mediterranean. Indeed, their aircraft have been expelled from Algerian Mers-el-Kebir. Nevertheless, Soviet strength in

Lucking Out In Asian War Despite U.S. Petulance

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON.—In assessing the American role in the two-week war between India and Pakistan, it is necessary to jettison the usual ideas about cause and effect, performance and result. What counted were luck and irony.

This country's performance was first inept and then ignoble. But the end result, especially if the President can disentangle himself from his own rhetoric, is not bad at all.

The inept part of the performance came before the war broke out. Ever since the President's chief foreign policy adviser, Henry Kissinger, passed through New Delhi last summer, Washington knew there was only one sure way to avert war. That was to prevail upon the Pakistani regime of President Yahya Khan to free the arrested Bengali leader, Mujibur Rahman, and open negotiations for an autonomous East Bengal.

President Nixon assured himself leverage over the Pakistani government by maintaining arms shipments. He wrung small concessions on troop deployment and negotiations with lesser Bengali leaders. But, inhibited by memories of loyalty to a former partner in the old anti-Communist crusade, he could never bring himself to push the Pakistanis to the point of releasing Sheikh Muji-

Ignoble Part

The ignoble part came after the Indians, acting in cold-blooded self-interest, went to war. In a fit of petulance, the President cut off aid and sent a naval task force to the Bay of Bengal. A number of officials, acting under his orders, stigmatized Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and the Indian regime in tones fit for Hitler and the Nazis.

Since nobody did anything differently as a result of all this huffing and puffing, the United States should logically have sustained the kind of diplomatic defeat that comes when a great power asserts itself to no purpose. But what actually happened on the ground in the subcontinent, far from being a defeat, is in keeping with American interests.

East Bengal has been the site of an historic change—divorce from Pakistan and movement toward independent status. But ethnic and geographical factors made that change inevitable anyway. So far, the cost in lives has been remarkably small,

Pakistan has also undergone major change. Apart from the loss of territory, the military leader, Yahya Khan, has been replaced by a civilian, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, as president. But the loss of territory was almost cer-tainly inevitable, and the replacement of an extremely stupid leader by an extremely clever one is not all bad.

In India, Mrs. Gandhi's popularity has soured to new heights and the central problem of India the problem of crumbling authority. A gain for Mrs. Gandhi means that India will be that much less of a burden on the rest of the world

Scant Chance

Finally, there is the diplomatic outcome. Russia, having fully backed India's victory, is now seen as the major foreign power on the subcontinent. But that has been true ever since Prime Minister Alexel Kosygin presided over the Indo-Pakistani truce at Tashkent back in 1966. With Mrs. Gandhi, a truly jealous nationalist, growing in authority, there is scant chance the Russians will derive any security advantages from their favored position in New Delhi.

The Chinese proved unable to stop gains by their chief rivals in the north and the south. They are the big losers, and they would have been visibly isolated—and paper tigers for all the world to except for American support at the United Nations.

As to this country, it has undoubtedly paid a price for Mr. Nixon's petulance. Not only does Washington look bad, but it will be harder than ever for the President to make the Congress cough up on aid. Still, the United States retains the economic and technical know-how which is more than ever required on the sub-

If Mr. Nixon can get over his personal pique, American economic assistance can play a role in building stronger regimes in East Bengal, Pakistan and India. That, in the long run, is the best insurance available against dramatic shifts of power adverse to the American interest.

Their spatial integration is in their kinship structure. It is, literally, the Abkhasians' all-encompassing design for living: It regulates relationships between families, determines where they live, defines the position of women and marriage rules. Through centuries of nonexistent or ineffective centralized authority, kinship was life's frame of reference, and it still is.

Kinship

Kinship in Abkhasia is an elaborate, complex set of relationships based on patrilineage. At its center is the family, extended through marriage by the sons; it also includes all those families which can be traced to a single progenitor; and, finally, to all persons with the same surname, whether the progenitor can be traced or not. As a result, an Abkhasian may be "kin" to several thousand people, many of whom he does not know. I first discovered the pervasiveness of kinship rules when my friend Omar, an Abkhasian who had accompanied me from Sukhumi to the village of Duripsh, introduced me to a number of people he called his brothers and sisters. When I had met more than 20 "Abkhasian reckoning is different from Russian. These people all

I took his explanation less seriously than I should have. Later, of one of Omar's "brothers," Omar, without a word, gave the record to me as a gift.

"Omar, it isn't yours," I said.
"Oh yes it is. This is the home of my brother," he said. When I appealed to the "brother," he said, "Of course he can give it to you. He is my brother." The consanguineal and affinal relationships that make up the foundation of the kinship struc-ture are supplemented by a variety of ritual relationships that involve lifetime obligations and serve to broaden the human environment from which Abkhasians derive their extraordinary sense of security. Although there are no alternative life styles toward which the rebellious may flee, the Abkhasians are ready to absorb others into their own cul-ture. During my visit, for in-stance, a Christian man was asked to be the godfather of a Moslem child; both prospective godfather and child were Abkhasiana. When I expressed sur-prise, I was told, "It doesn't matter. We want to enlarge our circle become difficult to climb trees."

The old are always active. "It is better to move without purpose than to sit still," they say. Before breakfast, they walk through the homestead's courtyard and orchard, taking care of small tasks that come to their attention. They look for fences and equipment in need of repair and check on the family's animals. At breakfast, their early morning survey completed, they report what has to be done. Until evening, the old spend fallen apples, then sit down on bench, telling stories or making toys for his grandchildren or great-grandchildren. Another chore which is largely attended to by the old is weeding the courtyard, a large green belonging to the homestead, which serves as group. Keeping it in shape requires considerable labor, yet I never saw a courtyard that was not tidy and well-trimmed. During the summer, many old men spend two or three months high in the mountains, living in shepherds' huts, helping to herd or hunting for themselves and the shepherds (with their arrested aging process, many are excellent marksmen despite their age). They obviously are not fearful of losing their authority during their absence; their time in the mountains is useful and piessurable.

Feeling Needed

The extraordinary attitude of the Abkhasians—to feel needed at 99 or 110—is not an artificial, If-protective one; it is the natural expression, in old age, of a consistent outlook that begins in childhood. The stoic upbringing of an Abkhasian child, in Which parents and senior relatives participate, instills respect, obedience and endurance. At an early age, children participate in household tasks; when they are not at school, they work in the fields or at home.

There are no separate "facts of life" for children and adults: The values given children are the ones adults live by, and there is no hypocritical disparity (23 in so many other societies) between adult words and deeds. Since what they are taught is considered important, and the work they are given is considered necessary, children are neither restless nor rebellious. As they mature, there are easy transitions from one status in life to another: a bride, for instance, will stay for a time with her husband's relatives, gradually becoming part of a new clan, before moving into his

From the beginning no gap between expectation and experience. Abkhasians expect a long and useful-life and look forward to old age with good son: in a culture which so highly values continuity in its traditions, the old are indispensable in their transmission. The elders preside at important ceremonial occasions, they mediate disputes and their knowledge of farming is sought. They feel needed because, in their own minds and everyone else's, they are. They are the opposite of burdens; they are highly valued

Lack of Data

The Abkhazians themselves are obviously right in citing their diet and their work habits as contributing factors in their longevity; in my opinion, their postponed, and later prolonged, sex life probably has nothing to do with it. Their climate is exemplary, the air (especially to 2 New Yorker) refreshing, but is not significantly different from many other areas of the world, where life spans are shorter. And while some kind of genetic selectivity may well have been at work, there simply is not enough information to evaluate the genetic factor in Abkhasian longevity.

My own view is that Abkhasians live as long as they do primarily because of the extra-ordinary cultural factors that structure their existence: uniformity and certainty of both individual and group behavior, the unbroken continuum of life's activities—the same games, the same work, the same food, the same self-imposed and socially perceived needs. And the increasing prestige that comes with increasing age,

When all else fails, a doctor is called and the aged Abkhasian is taken to the hospital-but always with the expectation, including his own, that he will recover. They never express the fatalistic view, "Well, what do you expect at that age?" Sickness is simply not considered normal and natural - 5.B.

PARIS THEATER: Perennial Popularity of Feydeau

By Thomas Ouinn Curtiss DARIS, Dec. 28 (IET),-No Parisian season would be complete without a revival of a Peydeau farce. Last year it was "Occupe-Toi d'amélie!" at the Madeleine. This year it is "La Main Passe" in a rich riot of fin-de-siècle costuming and Art Nouveau decor at the Marigny.

Feydean, who died in 1921, remains the most popular French dramatist of the past 100 years. He has survived all his contemporaries: those weighty delinea-tors of fashionable adultery, Bernstein and Bataille, and those social uplifters of that day, Brieux, De Curel and Hervieu. Probably he would be puzzled to find those once highly esteemed rivals now half-forgotten and neglected by the revivalists and his own plays in the repertory of the Comédie-Française. Marcel Achard claims that Feydeau is the greatest native comic author since Molière. But Feydeau never betrayed an ambition to enter Molière's house. He was content in supplying the demands of the Palais-Royal, the Nouveau-tes and other boulevard theaters where thinking and morals were low and laughter loud. Instructions

Under the library lamp the gorgeous fun of his plays tends to pale. His texts are too crowded with exacting descriptions of sets and lengthy instructions to his directors and players to make enjoyable reading. There is not & single line of sophisticated wit in all his dialogue. His humor has the common touch. It is vulgar and bawdy and many of his jests are sight gags. A stage-wright rather than playwright, he was deliberately nonliterary. He knew every trick of performing He has been declared a superb matician for the intricacies of his scenarios. His plots function behind the footlights like well-oiled machinery. Attempts to alter them result in disaster. They are so closely knit that the elimination of a line or a bit of business causes the whole structure to wobble. His characters, one and all, are caricatures of Belle Epoque types: clubmen, army officers, frivolous society matrons, kept ladies, coquettish soubrettes, parlor maids, cheeky delivery boys, winking valets, enraged cooks, shady hotel proprietors, bungling police inspec-tors and bores with speech defects or absurd foreign accents. They are creatures out of the funny papers placed in wild dilemmas of nightmare logic.

During 30 years of prolific practice Feydeau never changed his dramatis personae, though he altered his form of presentation. He began with a series of vaudevilles and then moved on to more complicated comedies demanding large companies. In his last the voices could be better, though years, he specialized in one-act one of the virtues of this "Don pieces in which nagging wives, as Giovanni" as seen in Florence frightening as Strindberg furies, rocked the house.

"La Main Passe" belongs to his second period, an elaborate farce with 15 fat parts. Pierre Mondy has directed it briskly and Sophie Desmarets, Jean-Pierre Darras, Alfred Adam and Pierre Doris play it heartily and to commendable effect. The critic Sarcey once wrote PLORENCE (IHT).—The programs of Italian opera houses this season are marked by a good deal of exchange, a healthy sign and surely a sound economic and cultural policy. The "Lohengrin" which opened the Bologna season last month moved south to Florence, and now Florence is seeing the "Don Glovanni" which, earlier this month, inaugurated the season at La Fenice in Venice. From Florence this same production will move on to other, smaller cities, where the Mozart masterpiece is something of a rarity.

It is a worthwhile production, which should travel well, since the sets designed by Peter Hall (who also did the levely cos-tumes) are generally simple and handsome, and the staging, by Filippo Crivelli is, for the most part, deft and straightforward As the production moves about, there will probably be cast changes; and, in fact, some of was the welcome fusion, the musical coherence.

The title role is, of course, a star part, and the young Italian bass Ruggero Raimondi is definitely a star by now. But he is not yet a dominating stage personality, perhaps he is not quite a Don Giovanni as vet. either. He sings well, the voice is fresh and warm. he pretends to offer assistance, were not sufficiently sinister to justify her subsequent outburst "Don Ottavio, son morta." Similarly, in the first scene with the statue, one did not have a sense of supernatural defiance. Peter Masg, who conducted the Florence orchestra with great brio and with sensible tempos, should have given more time to the recitatives, which he accompanied at the harpsichord in an off-hand way, allowing some of the singers to gabble out the words.

An exception was Lajos Kozma, whose voice is small even for the role of Don Ottavio, but whose crystalline Italian enunciation and profound musical sense made his interpretation a constant pleasure.

Ilva Ligabue was a noble Elvira (the director might bave allowed her a little more violence of movement), and Graziella Sciutti was an enchanting-but never coy-Zerlina. The Leporello was Giuseppe Taddei, whose underplaying was welcome in a role too often clowned. Leonardo Monreale was not able to do much with the role of Masetto, and Claudia Parada was far out of her depth as Donna Anna. The Commendatore, Graziano del Vivo, has the voice for the part and an impressive stage presence.

The temporal integration of Abkhasian life is expressed in its general continuity, in the absence of limiting, defining conditions existence like "unemployed," "adolescent," "alienated." Ab-khazians are a life-loving, optimistic people, and unlike so many very old "dependent" people in the United States—who feel they are a burden to themselves and their families—they enjoy the prospect of continued life. One 99-year-old Abkhasian, Akhba Suleiman of the village of Achandara, told his doctor, "It isn't time to die yet. Japan Cuts Discount Rate In Attempt to Aid Economy

TOKYO, Dec. 28 (NYT).— Japan decided today to lower its official discount rate by 0.5 percent to 4.75 percent. The new rate will go into effect tomorrow.

The cut in the discount rate is part of a government attempt to fight the stagment domestic economy, which was aggravated by the recent currency crisis and the resulting upward revaluation of the yen.

The action will lower the discount rate for commercial paper, the standard credit instrument to 4.75 percent a year, compared with 4.5 percent in the United States and 5 percent in Britain. Japanese business circles react-ed warmly to the announcement by the Bank of Japan. "The move will have a good psychological effect upon the domestic industries which have been extremely cooled by the revaluation of the yen," Yoshio Hiyama, president of a major trading concern, Marubeni-Iida,

The reduction, the fifth in 15 months, brings the annual official money rate below 5 percent for the first time since the central bank incugurated the present rate system in August, 1955.

The four lines are expected to convert their purchase options into firm orders within the next

Their attempt to form a "Concorde consortium" stems from the plane's huge cost—nearly $34 million each including initial spare parts-and the need to pressure governments into establishing corridors for supersonic travel over some Siberian and Arctic zones and the Sahara and Middle East

Officials attributed the rise to a large influx of short-term capital and favorable exports following an increase in shipments to the United States after the end of the dock strike.

Exports totaled $2.03 billion, up from $1.53 billion in November 1970, and imports $1.39 billion, up from $1.24 billion. This left a. favorable trade surplus of $640 million, up from $298 million in

The short-term capital account showed a surplus of $130 million in November, compared with a deficit of $11 million in October and a surplus of $8 million in November 1970.

He said this was due slackening of foreign demand and to production difficulties in some sectors, notably textiles and the building industry. Foreign demand was lower than expected because of the uncertain conditions that characterized the Western European economy in 1971,

Rules on Salaries

The Pay Board, meanwhile, issued a set of specific rules on salary increases to executives and other forms of executive compensation. The rules, which were announced earlier in a general form, hold annual increases in executive salaries to the same 5.5 percent guideline applied to other wages. Under the Price Commission rules, retailers with sales of under $100,000 a year must post the base price of the 40 items that had the largest dollar sales volume during the previous fiscal year or the prices of items that accounted for at least 50 percent of total sales that year, whichever is less. Prices Rise on Wall St. As Market Reawakens

NEW YORK, Dec. 28 (NYT),-Glamour issues moved ahead on the New York Stock Exchange today and the general market suddenly came to life after three lackadaisical sessions surrounding the long Christmas weekend. Both volume and prices moved up along with investor spirits as the tape lagged three minutes late at the final bell. The Dow Jones industrial aver-age started out with only a token age started out with only a token gain during the first hour and then steadily gathered momentum to close at its best level of a busy session. It rose 8.51—thus crasing the net loss of around 7 over the three presons trading down to and at $22.08 ing days—to end at 829 98.

Turnover rose to 15.00 million

Declines were registered for stock prices, down 4.8 percent, shares from yesterday's 11.89 and industrial materials prices, down 0.5 percent, Commenting on the figures, Mr. Passer said that the 0.2 percent Bausch & Lomb, the glamour standout, ran up 10 1/4 to close at a record price of 129. Short covering was a factor, brokers said, in sending up the price. The stock sold as low as 127 last month.

Last year's bear-market low for Bausch & Lomb, whose Soflens contact lens gave the optical company a new image, was 27 1.8. Meanwhlic, one investment advisory service has raised its extracte for 1971 earnings to $2.25 a share from $2 a share. Net profit was $1.53 a share in

An important factor in sending stock prices generally higher was the decline in short-term interest rates, normally a favorable development for equities. In the financial district there was con-jecture that further cuts in the prime rate-the lowest interest charge by banks to their best corporate clients-could be in the offing. In addition, the government's lending economic indicators dis-played a slight gain for November. Finally, some brokerage-house officials noted that many institutions seemed to have completed much of their selling for 1971 and, therefore, few blocks were offered for sale while signs of fresh buying appeared.

Federal National Mortgage, the third most active issue, jumped 7/8 to 94 1/8 after trading at a record price of 94 3/8. It was helped by the interest-rate decline and by recently announced plans for a 4-for-1 split.

ICC Approves Kailroad Merger

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28 (Renters).-The Interstate Commerce Commission today announced its approval of the merger of Illinots Central Railroad Co. with Gulf, Mobile & Ohio Railroad

Approval of the merger, which would form a new Illinois Central Gulf Ratiroad Co., is conditioned on the Union Pacific Railroad and three voting trustees divesting themselves of any stock holdings within 10 years.

The commission, in its announcement, also stipulated that none of the stock of the new railroad may be transferred to the investment firm of Brown Brothers Harriman & Co. or to any affiliates or Harriman family

The ICC said it was requiring the Union Pacific and Brown Brothers divestiture because of its regulation prohibiting control of more than one railroad.

Broader Power On Stock Deals Sought by SEC

By James L. Rowr jr. WASHINGTON, Dec. 28 (WP). -The Securities and Exchange Commission today asked Congress for new powers to broaden its centrol over securities transactions and accurities exchanges including the power to approve or disapprove stock exchange rules and the right to enforce those rules directly if it deems it

Decembery. The SEC request is a sharp shift from the bistorical pattern of securities regulation. Observers said the industry could be expected to strongly oppose any SEC intervention in the so-called "self-regulatory process."

SEC chairman William J. Casey characterized the commission's current authority over rulemaking oy self-regulatory bodies as "an illogical patchwork of provisions which falls short of giving the commission authority to act promptly and effectively where a rule, or a proposed rule, is or might be injurious to the public interest.

The request for new congressicual authority came in a report to Congress on "Safe and Un-sound Practices of Brokers and Dealers." The report was man-dated by the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970. The SEC also asked for authority to oversee the performance of transfer agents—such as banks—and requested authority to review disciplinary proceedings conducted by stock exchanges against mem-

The trend toward team operations was described by Neal Q. Herrick of the U.S. Department of Labor, the other organizer of the symposium, who recently completed a study of labor prac-tices in various industrialized countries.

He said that by the end of next month Volvo expects to eliminate the muffler-exhaust assembly line in one of its plants as a step toward ultimate elimination of such procedures. Intro-duction of the assembly line by Henry Ford is often cited as having been the dawn of the mass

Some of the management consultants who spoke from the rostrum conceded that the most persuasive incentive for management to give workers greater control over their own work procedures was economic. They argued that under such circumstances productivity increases and the manifestations of discontent subside.

East knew that he knew.

The most brilliant individual effort in the challenge match two weeks ago between the Italian Blue team and the Aces occurred neither in bidding nor in dummy play, but in defense. Bob Wolff opened the South hand in second seat with four hearts. This silenced the other players and Benito Garozzo as West led the club ace.

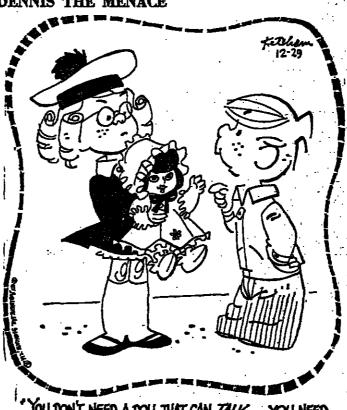

On the first trick East played the club two-clearly a singleton or the low card from a tripleton since he would have played high with a doubleton. Hoping to find out, West shifted to the spade king. He was not surprised to win the trick, for it was unlikely that South would have pre-empted with an ace in a side suit, but he was very interested in his partner's play of the nine, calling for a spade continuation.

If East had begun with a singleton club he would have played his lowest spade under the king, asking for a reversion to clubs. So

Criminals at Large

By Newgate Callendar

$5.95): it keeps the reader wondering what, exactly, is going on; and it has a peculiar kind of charm. English "characters" are all over the place, but they are neither cliche types nor exag-gerated. The writing comes from the grand line of the literate British novel, including offhandallusions to Mozart, Eliot, Keats, Dickens, Horace and what not. None of this seems dragged in as a show of erudition. Here, it is the normal complement of intelligent speech.

The interesting people this Cambridge professor-novelist has grouped together are engaged in a church crawl specializing in Norman ruins. A body is found in a tomb. Later, the body is no longer in the tomb—but murder is only the half of it. Other, dimly-perceived things bover constantly in the background. Quietly, but with mounting tension. White advances the story. He has a keen eye and ear, a deft touch. All that and a sense of humor, too. "A Secondhand Tomb," in two words, is exceptionally scave.

Also very good of its kind is "Walk a Black Wind" by Michael Collins (Dodd, Mead, $4.95). This one is in the American private-eye tradition of Chandler, Hammett and Macdonald. There is a rather odd gimmick: the detective. Dan Fortune, is one-armed. Otherwise, he functions in much the same way as Lew Archer and his great counterparts. He has no illusion about anything; he is cynical without being insensitive; and he adheres to his ownmoral code.

This is the third title in the Dan Fortune series and as in the others, the action centers around New York. This one, however, contains side trips to an Indian reservation and a city in New-York State where an old crime has been committed. Fortune is investigating the murder of a rebellious girl, and in the process he turns up a pretty mess-involving a mayor and his wife, a dirty land deal and a great amount of violence. The ingredients are familiar, but Collins handles everything with surety. The final shoot-out even has an element of compassion.

Where would we be without the British mystery: story? Here are four, each with something to recommend: "Not One of Us" by June Thomson (Harper & Row. $2.95); "The Curtained Sleep" by Archie Roy (World, $5.95); "Death Trap" by Harry Car-michael (McCall $4.95) and "The Temple Tree" by David Beaty (Houghton Mifflin, $5.95).

The Thomson book—a first novel—is one of those quiet at-

Two things are soon apparent fairs as much concerned with about R. J. White's "A Sec-character as with plot. It centers ondhand Tomb" (Harper & Row, on a hippie-like stranger in a small town. When a girl gets murdered, the stranger comes under suspicion—only because he is an outsider. Furists may find the ending unfair. The mystery story, as a genre, has certain conventions, and Mrs. Thomson breaks one of the major ones. Too bad, for "Not One of Us" is highly readable and sympathetic.

"Death Trap" is a rather old-isshioned puzzle about a fake auto fatality. Things are seldom what they seem in this kind of book, and it remains for the crime reporter of a London daily to root out the truth. Ingenious and comfortably traditional, this

"The Temple Tree" has a dif-ferent kind of detective—a crass investigator. The action takes place in India, where a Boeing 707 goes down in bad weather. The accident is ascribed to pilot error by everybody except Hannaker, the stubborn prober. author is an ex-airline pilot, ris cockpit routines ring true. The interest here is primarily in aviation and ground-control stuff rather than in the mystery itself. The villain can be guessed shortly after the story gets under way.

Beaty is an ex-pilot writing about aviation. Archie Roy is an astrophysicist writing about science. "The Curtained Sleep" is about a space scientist hurt in a car accident in a remote corner of Scotland. The first part of the book is slow-moving. Suddenly there's a curious twist to the story. When it gets moving, it really takes off, varoom! The finale is a blaze of excitement. Literally, for a cute little thermite bomb figures in the plot.

Cave Explorers Find Prehistoric Remains

GIUGGIANELLO, Italy, Dec. 28 (UPI) .- Three cave explorers have announced that they have discovered a huge underground cavern containing human remains from prehistoric times and from the Middle Ages.

The three cave explorers, who last year found a cave with wall paintings 6,400 years old, said that bones, and vases found in the cavern led them to believe it had been used by man in the Iron and Copper Ages and again in the Middle Ages.

They said they noticed a crack in the earth, crawled in, and connected by a narrow passage. The discovery was made a few miles from Lecce at the bottom of the heel of the Italian boot.

Missouri and Colorado advanced in the Big Eight tournament, beating Nebraska and Oklahoma State.

Missouri pulled away from Nebraska in the last stages of the first half and went on to a 76-64 triumph. Colorado scored the game's first nine points and went on to an 83-62 victory over Oklahoma State.

Oklahoma City used four straight free throws in the final 16 seconds by Larry Trimble to whip North Texas State, 85-79, in the opening round of the All-College tournament. In the other opening-round games, guards Bob Sherwin and John O'Malley combined for 46 points to lead Army past Indiana State, 83-75. Sherwin finished with 25 and O'Malley had 21,

The touchdown by Green was his third of the afternoon and capped a 58-yard drive.

I would painlessly wave goodbye to the European Nations Cup, a mere upstart, barely more than a decade old, which tolls for two years of qualifying matches to reach final stages which are played off in a few days. The last of its ill angured finals, played in Italy in 1963, threw up a semifinal between Yugoslavia and England in Florence which, for sheer victousness, was one of the worst internationals I have seen. "She wants us both to make it to the Super Bowl," Bubbs, said yesterday. "That way, regardless of who wins, the money comes into the family."

Bubba is a very large and very talented member of the Baltimore defense that consistently menaces the opposition. His younger brother is a slightly smaller rookle reserve on the Dallas defense that is almost as menacing.

Whether they'll both wind up in New Orleans on Jan. 16 remains to be seen, but Baltimore is taking a step toward gaining that trip for Bubba with another trip today.

Recalling what happened on their first visit to Miami this season, the Colts are leaving today for Tampa, Fla., where they work out this week in an attempt to become acclimated to the significantly warmer weather. When the terms met in Miami Nov. 21 in their first game, the Dolphins won, 17-14, and the Colts felt that the heat had as much to do with their loss as, Garo Yepremian's game-deciding field goal. "We played them a real good first half, but we pooped out in the second half, the heat got to us." Smith said, recalling that the Dolphins scored all their points in the second half. So the Colts, who utterly overwhelmed Cleveland in Sunday's AFC semifinal, will work out this week at the University of South Florida in Tampa.

Sunday's game will mark the second time in three years that two teams from the same division will play for the championship. In 1969, under the American League's one - year - only playoff system. Oakland and Kansas City wound up meeting for the title, and the second-place Chiefs won and went on to win the Super Bowl, too.

To duplicate that feat the Colts will have to adjust to the weather and overcome the advantage the Dolphins might have from their bome field and from the extra psychological lift they received after their incredible overtime victory against the Chiefs last Saturday.

hand, will have to perform much better than in their 14-3 loss at Baltimore Dec. 11. Offensively, the Dolphins scored only on Yepremian's field goal in the third quarter. Defensively, they let Johnny Unitas and the Colt offense consume nearly 10 minutes in each of the first two quarters on touchdown drives.

49ers Not Special SAN FRANCISCO, Dec.

(WP),-Only when they fail to justify their name is any notice usually paid to the special teams of professional football. Such an unwanted day came last Sunday for the San Francisco 49ers unit, when its every action seemed to lead only to special messes for the rest of the team to clean up. "Our own special teams almost beat us singlehandedly," said 49er receiver Gene Washington, with Ed Beard, captain of that unit, noting, "We had a complete breakdown in just about every area. It was by far the worst special teams day of the last two sessons."

What the 49ers were talking about were Speedy Duncan's three kickoff returns for 170 yards and Ted Vactor's 47-yard punt return, which exceeded the 44 total yards the team had allowed on 18 punt returns during the regular season.

Such a lapse cannot be tolerated for Sunday's NFC title game against the Dallas Cowboys. who have runback man Cliff Harris, fourth in the conference in both kickoff and punt returns. and are characterized by

Vikings May Make Pass for Tarkenton

By William N. Wallace NEW YORK, Dec. 28 (NYT) .-Of the four teams that lost in the division playoffs last weekend, the Minnesota Vikings need the most profound pondering of their posi-tion. Perhaps what the Vikings need also is Francis Asbury Tarkenton-the return of the prodigal one to the land of 10,000 lakes. The Browns were not expected to beat the Colts. The Chiefs provided half the actors in the best game of this season, or possibly any other, and lost only because one of the sport's top kickers, Jan Stenerud, missed a 31-yard field goal. More likely, the husband-to-bewill conclude that it would be more fun to arrange an automobile leasee, and write off the marriage negotiations as good experience. All right, he is a male chauvinist: the woman in the case is well rid of him.

Men who truly respect women, however, will not carp or make light of the marriage contract. Let us admit it: The women have a good case. New ideas always seem absurd, even when they are good, and the marriage contract is a very good idea indeed.

Men should accept it without whining and let us all move shead. Ahead, that is, to the parental contract. This is the area where injustice has prevailed far too long. And why? Because of that dreary old American custom known as Kiddismo in which children are encouraged to believe that the universe revolves around children.

When a child calls at 3 a.m. for her mother and, instead, finds her father standing by her bedside, his explanation may get very little respect. "I know you called for Mommy, Jennifer, but this is Sunday night, and under the terms of my contract with Mommy it's my turn."

Is Jennifer going to accept this? Not likely. Certainly not if she is a well-adjusted child, such as all Americans want. "I don't want you, Daddy," Jennifer will probably scream.

Mommy will probably get up. This could be avoided with a parental contract. After Jennifer had told her father that he wouldn't do, he would phone his lawyer instead of getting his wife out of bed in violation of con-

The father's lawyer would call Jennifer's lawyer and threaten to get an injunction unless she immediately settled for daddy.

With this advance we are all on our way in') the rosy future. What fun it will be calling Jennifer's lawyer later in life to threaten court action unless her bedroom is immediately cleaned and the wet towels removed from mommy's bathtub. It could be the biggest thing to happen to lawyers since automobile insur-

Mr. Behan was a hard-drinking Irishman, who was jailed three times for Irish Republican Army activities. He was a member of IRA from his teens, and at 9 joined Fianna Eireann, a youth organization, which Mr. Behan referred to as the Republican Boy Scouts.

He died in Dublin in 1964 at 41, leaving the apparently unfinished script of a play which he had shown to friends under the title "The Catacombs."

However, before he died, Mr. Twenty sheets of manuscript Behan-the author of the plays "The Quare Fellow" and "The Hostage" and the autobiographical "Berstal Boy" which was later made into a play-changed the name of the play and finished it during a visit to Celifornia.

To comment on this situation. Behan used two Dublin shawlies-old women-as a sort of charus. The text, like that of "The Hostage," is interspersed with songs.

Mr. Simpson, who produced the first performance of Mr. Behan's prison play "The Quare Fellow" in Dublin in .954 says the newly completed work gives a close insight into Mr. Behan's philosophy in the years when drink was pushing him to the grave.

'It is Brendan's farewell and

His attitude toward life in his later years comes across strongly through one of the characters, possibly because this was written when he knew he was dying." Expherant'

The festival's director, Brendan Smith, calls the play an exuberant piece of writing.

He said: "Four copies of the first act were known to be in existence. When the scattered parts of the play discovered by Mrs. Behan were assembled, it was found that they related to the known first act."

Simpson said he plans first a workshop production following the present text. That will show whether any changes are needed for the full-scale festival production in March, he said,
